Chronology

- 1901 Tennessee statute apportioned the seats in the General Assembly among the State’s 95 counties, based on the Federal census reports of 1900 and the population of eligible voters.
- 1941 Joe C. Carr was elected secretary of state of Tennessee in 1941 and became president of Young Democrats of America. The Putnam County native would serve for 26 of the next 36 years.
- ca. 1955-1956 Nashville attorney Z. T. Osborn represented a group seeking reapportionment for the legislature. The Tennessee Supreme Court threw out an apportionment act on grounds it violated the due process clause of the Constitution.
- 1957 Joe C. Carr was reelected Tennessee Secretary of State by the Eightieth General Assembly of Tennessee.
- May 18, 1959 The reapportionment suit Baker v. Carr was filed in the Federal District Court at Nashville
- Dec. 1959 The U.S. District Court held for the defendants in Baker v. Carr. An appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court was slated ahead.
- Feb. 4, 1960 An order was entered by a three-judge court dismissing the complaint of the reapportionment suit on the grounds the Federal court lacked jurisdiction. Subsequently, the plaintiffs appealed from the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

- Feb. 26, 1960 The Baker v. Carr case arrived to be heard at the direction of Hon. William E. Miller, District Judge for the Middle District of Tennessee.
- April 19, 1961 Appeal No. 6 argued, Supreme Court of the United States, 369 U.S. 186, Baker v. Carr, Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee. Advocates Charles S. Rhyne argued the cause for the appellants. Jack Wilson, Assistant Attorney General of Tennessee, argued the cause for the appellees.
- Oct. 9, 1961 Baker v. Carr was reargued before the Supreme Court. Z. T. Osborn, Jr. reargued the cause for the appellees. Jack Wilson, Assistant Attorney General of Tennessee, reargued the cause for the appellees. Charles S. Rhyne reargued the cause for the appellants. Archibald Cox, Solicitor General, by special leave of Court, reargued the cause for the United States, as amicus curiae, urging reversal.
- March 26, 1962 Appeal No. 6 decided, Supreme Court of the United States, 369 U.S.186, Baker v. Carr, Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee. "One man, one vote" became the law of the land.
- ca. April 1962 The Supreme Court reversed the district court decision in April, 1962, holding that the Federal court had jurisdiction. It remanded the case to the district court for action in conformity with its opinion.
- Sept. 26, 1962 Attorney Harris Gilbert, attorney and member of the Democratic Primary board, lectured on election laws at the first fall meeting of the Nashville League of Women Voters at the Andrew Jackson Hotel.
- Nov. 26, 1962 The Davidson County legislative delegation convened at their regular meeting. Members of the delegation agreed to invite members of the planning commission and attorney Harris Gilbert to appear before them to discuss apportionment. Harris Gilbert worked on the original apportionment. With Gilbert were Robert Puryear and Joe Haas of the city-county planning commission, who had prepared several reapportionment plan proposals.
- Nov. 29, 1962 Members of the Davidson County legislative delegation began preparing for the reapportionment battle with an intensive briefing session. The delegation began plans for a united urban front to push for equitable reapportionment in the general assembly.

- March 1963 The Tennessee General Assembly approved a new plan for apportionment of the Senate and made six changes recommended by the court in the lineup of House seats.
- ca. Mar. 22, 1963 Four attorneys for the original group of plaintiffs in the reapportionment fight decide to go back to the courts when the Senate passed the reapportionment bill. The attorneys include the former Mayor of Memphis, Walter Chandler, Z. T. Osborn, Jr. of Nashville, Senator Hobart Atkins of Knoxville, and Harris A. Gilbert of Nashville.
- June 15, 1964 The Supreme Court ruled that all state legislatures must be apportioned according to population. It was decreed the ruling would take effect in 1967, not 1965, as some reapportionment backers had preferred.
- June 27, 1964 Federal court panel ruled in Nashville that, beginning with the 1967 Tennessee General Assembly, representation in both houses will be based strictly on population.
- Dec. 9, 1965 Adopted in Convention that apportionment of senators and representatives in Tennessee would be determined substantially according to population, based on the U. S. Bureau of Census. Subsequently approved at election November 8, 1966, and proclaimed by Governor Frank G. Clement, December 2, 1966.

Biographical/Historical Sketch

In 1959, the Baker v. Carr case, ultimately decided by the United States Supreme Court, was initiated in Tennessee by urban voters who brought an action before the Federal District Court in Nashville against Joseph Cordell Carr, the Tennessee Secretary of State, and George McCanless, the Attorney General. The plaintiffs objected to problems of apportionment and legislative districting of rural and urban districts. The case applied the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution prohibiting states from denying any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. After the District Court dismissed their case, the Supreme Court decided in favor of the plaintiffs (argued April 19-20, 1961; reargued October 9, 1961, and decided March 26, 1962) for a “one-man, one-vote” ruling in reapportionment of state legislative districts. The Supreme Court ruling forced the Tennessee legislature to reapportion itself on the basis of population. Within two years of the decision in Baker v. Carr, citizens in forty-one states had filed suit in apportionment cases.

Plaintiff Charles Baker was a Republican who lived in Shelby County, Tennessee, where the large urban city of Memphis is located. He made complaint that the Tennessee State Constitution required that legislative districts be redrawn every ten years according to the Federal census to provide for districts of substantially equal population. In fact though, Tennessee had not redistricted since 1901. At the time of Baker's lawsuit, the population had shifted such that the district of Shelby County had about ten times as many residents as some of the rural districts. Baker argued that a discrepancy existed in favor of rural citizens receiving more voting representation than the urban citizens. Baker objected that problems of apportionment therefore caused him to fail to receive the "equal protection of the laws" required by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Joseph ("Joe") Cordell Carr, Sr., (1907-1981), a former Tennessee Secretary of State and long-time treasurer of the Tennessee Democratic Party, was the defendant in the lawsuit. Though not the person who set the district lines, he was responsible for the conduct of elections in Tennessee as Secretary of State. Originally the State of Tennessee argued that legislative districts were essentially political, rather than judicial questions, citing the plurality opinion of the court in Colegrove v. Green (1946), wherein Justice Felix Frankfurter declared that, "Courts ought not to enter this political thicket."

Historically, Tennessee's long-fought remap battle for reapportionment of the legislature had prior beginnings circa 1955 when proponents were represented by Nashville attorney Z. T. "Tommy" Osborn. He was instrumental in getting Nashville Mayor Ben West and the City of Nashville aboard as a plaintiff. In the Baker v. Carr case, Nashville attorney Harris A. Gilbert was the co-counsel representing the urban communities in the reapportionment case. Other prominent figures involved in the case were John Jay Hooker, Jr., who became Special Assistant to Robert F. Kennedy in 1961, Archibald Cox, U.S. Department of Justice, and attorneys Walter Chandler of Memphis and Hobart F. Atkins of Knoxville.

Baker v. Carr had a profound effect on the role of state governments and their relationships with the Federal government and the Federal courts. The lawsuit resulted in the U.S. Supreme Court ordering state legislatures to reapportion themselves and declaring that Federal courts have jurisdiction in such cases by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Scope and Contents of the Collection

A collection of documentary sources related to the Baker v. Carr "one man, one vote" case about Tennessee reapportionment, spanning ca. 1959 to ca. 2003 (bulk ca. 1960-ca. 1965). The papers relate to the lawsuit filed by urban voters against Tennessee's Secretary of State and Attorney in the U.S. District Court of Middle, Tennessee (Civil Action No. 2724). Includes documentation of the record on appeal amended and supplemental complaint of plaintiffs, pleadings and the City of Nashville's involvement in the legislative reapportionment case. The materials include exhibits introduced in the case, maps, statistics, and diagrams alongside legislative bills, pleadings, etc. Includes documentary sources related to the lawsuit of Nashville's Mayor Ben West v. Carr, with the published jurisdictional statement in the U.S. Supreme Court, October Term (1963). Includes sources about the Tennessee General Assembly and reapportionment matters, as well as documentation about several of the attorneys for the plaintiffs. Includes copies of additional cases, briefs, pleadings from other jurisdictions, such as "Gomillion et al v. Lightfoot" (1960) and "Toombs v. Fortson" (1962).
